Dear Members,

Assalam-o-Alaikum Warahmatullah Wabarakatuh

ADFIMI has, by the grace of Allah, succeeded in completing twelve events in the first half of 2010 thanks to co-sponsorships offered by our host members. We are reporting on eight of these events in this issue.

In order to include all of these events we had to have additional number of pages. Still, due to congestion, we are unable to report on IDB News or News from Members in this issue which I regret.

The 26th General Assembly has given us the mandate to organize a flagship event in Autumn 2010, and we need your support to realize this event in Istanbul.

I look forward to seeing you at this flagship event.

Best regards

Nuri Birtek
Secretary General

Turkish Banking system: crisis, what crisis?

Abstract of the presentation made in Istanbul on 29.06.2010 by A. IMBERT

While in Europe, numerous banks faced serious problems following the financial crisis in Q4 08, the Turkish banking sector recorded a good performance with a return on equity of 22.8% in 2009 after a quite good 18.6% in 2008. Several reasons can explain this strong resilience of the turkish system:

1/ No exposure to derivatives and a comfortable liquidity

Regarding the financial instruments, the Turkish banking system looks very basic, with no complex instruments and a very marginal use of derivatives or securitization. Furthermore, the banking sector is not very deep: the ratio of total assets to GDP was just 87.5% in December 2009, while the average for European Union is above 300%, and the loans are quite limited with just 50% of total assets (securities, mainly T-bills accounting for 31% of total assets). An effect of this low level of credit is that the liquidity is not a problem, Turkey being one of the few European countries with a loans/deposits ratio below 100%.

2/ Lessons from the (past) crisis: a strong regulatory framework with a very conservative Regulator.

In 2001, Turkey experienced a very serious domestic crisis, which led to a large and costly restructuration of the financial system; the Turkish Regulator (BDDK) estimates the cost of this restructuration as around 30% of the GDP! Obviously, the regulation implemented in the following years was impacted by this traumatic experience and explains why the BDDK looks so conservative.

3/ Thanks to the high profitability and CAR, current risks are manageable

The FX position is well balanced (457 M USD positive in June 2010), the turkish banks have no problem to roll over their syndicated loans, and, regarding the FX liquidity, the central Bank showed that it would take the adequate measures if necessary. The same can be said about the TL liquidity;

According to the stress tests implemented, the banking system is well positioned to face with the several market risks;

So far, the credit risk is under control. Even if some segments need to be closely monitored (specially SME’s for the corporate sector, and credit cards for the retail), the overall Non Profit Loans ratio stands at a reasonable level (4.4% in June 2010). Furthermore, the strong profitability (RoE >20%) and the high capital adequacy ratio (19.5% in May 2010), constitute a big buffer: the stress tests reveals that an increase of 5.2 percentage points in NPLs could be covered by the period’s net profit in September 2009, and even with a 15 point incremental increase in the NPL ratio, the CAR of the sector would remain above the legal limit of 8%.
Current Situation Financial Liberalization And Banking Consolidation: The Maghrebian Experience

Dr. Dhafer SAIDANE
Professor, Skema Business School and EQUIPPE University of Lille.
PhD in Economics – HDR from Université de La Sorbonne.

The weight of the Arabic Maghreb banking system (Egypt, Libya, Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco and Mauritania) in Africa is important. Of the top 50 banks in Africa, in terms of balance sheet in 2009, there are 25 banks from North Africa with an amount of 350 billion U.S. dollars, or 80% of the total. In this classification, Egypt ranks first with total assets of around 120 billion dollars (with 22 banks), Morocco is ranked second with total assets of around 96 billion dollars (with 7 banks), and Algeria with a total of 62 billion dollars (with 7 banks), and Libya with a total of 44 billion dollars (with 4 banks) and finally Tunisia with a total of 27 billion dollars (with 9 banks).

The North African banking systems have undergone profound changes. Several financial reforms were aimed at the consolidation of banks’ capital and strengthening the stability of their activities.

Since the 1990s, the central Maghreb countries, Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia, undertook extensive financial reforms to strengthen their banking systems and strengthen their stabilities through mergers between financial institutions. These consolidations meet requirements in terms of capital suggested by the international rules of Basel.

The process of nationalization after independence

In Morocco, Bank Al-Maghrib (BAM) has been entrusted by the Dahir No. 1-59-233 of June 30, 1959, issue of the currency and the task of ensuring its stability and its convertibility and ensure the proper functioning of the banking system (supplemented by Act of July 6, 1993, regarding the performance of the business of credit).

The Maghrebian banking market: new horizons to explore

In the Maghreb, Moroccan institutions have been particularly aggressive or conquerors. Attijariwafa Bank has partnered with its shareholder Banco Santander to buy 53.5% stake in Banque du Sud (Tunisia) in October 2005. The BMCE Capital bought in 2000, 50% stake in Axis, Tunisian company specialized in the business of financial advisory, asset management and financial intermediation. This gave birth to a new Tunisian-Moroccan Investment Bank “AXIS Capital”.

The Tunisian side, “Maghreb Leasing Algeria”, Offshore leasing company, was established in Algiers by the group “Tunisie Leasing” in partnership with Amen Bank, the third private bank in Tunisia. The new entity will give priority to become a privileged partner of SMEs and corporates in financing their equipment and materials necessary for their activities.

The close historical, geographical and cultural situations allowed French banks to be more active in the Maghreb. The Maghrebian banking markets is a source of growth for the major French banking groups. The rate of bancarization (banking services) is relatively low. The Maghrebian market represents significant potential.
