WDFI/ALIDE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON DEVELOPMENT BANKING IN THE 21ST CENTURY

ALIDE HEADQUARTERS
PASEO DE LA REPÚBLICA 3211, SAN ISIDRO
LIMA, PERU
THURSDAY, 8 OCTOBER 2015
15.00 - 18.30 HRS

The new age of globalization witnessed the balance of power in the world economy to shift to developing countries that are now becoming the engines of global growth and desiring to be stewards of their own futures. In the process, development banks continue to face huge challenges in the coming decade.

There is a revolution in development finance and it is due to the fact that multilateral development finance is now only a small drop in global financial flows. That is essentially due to the globalization of financial markets.

Most governments can now raise money directly from the international markets. In some regions private capital flows may exceed ten times the finance available from the multilateral banks. Hence It is no longer enough for development banks to play their traditional role of financial intermediaries, using their high rating to borrow cheap from international markets then lending on to countries at a narrow spread.

Then there is the Chinese factor where significant capital being made available by China, especially to those countries lacking access to capital markets, play an important role in development financing.

Thirdly there is the rise of regional development banks. Development Bank of Brazil, Venezuela based Development Bank of Latin America, CAF (Corporación Andina de Fomento), Development Bank of Southern Africa and most recently the BRICS Development Bank (or New Development Bank) are prominent examples. Some of these banks have a balance sheet larger than the World Bank

The effects of this revolution – which has refocused thinking away from “shortages of finance” towards how to best harness available finance – are ongoing.

However, the principal raison d'être for the multilateral development banks has not diminished and they still have a valuable role to play as providers of counter-cyclical funds as they did during the 2008-09 global financial crisis.

These developments put on increasing responsibility on developing country development banks to shoulder higher share in the financing of development in their countries and in their regions.

The quest for sustainability will probably be the main challenge facing NDBs. They will continue providing long-term financing but at the same time will have to provide a range of other tools such as cheap short term loans, financing SMEs and leverage important sources through syndication. NDBs may also assist in building an inclusive financial sector.

A profound redefinition for development bank may even be necessary.

The conference will consider the future of Development Banking in two sessions. While the first will deal with the changes occurring in the Worldwide Development Banking –its Concepts and Achievements- the second session will deal with Public Policies and Fields of Action.

Nuri Birtok
Secretary General
WDFI/ADFIMI

IN MEMORIAM

WDFI regrets the sudden decease in January 2015 of Dr. Rommel Acevedo, the legendary Secretary General of ALIDE (la Asociación Latinoamericana de Instituciones Financieras para el Desarrollo), and former Secretary General of WDFI.

On this occasion of WDFI - ALIDE Joint Conference on Development Banking, we miss him dearly as he initiated the conference before his demise. We also remember the great contributions he has made to the work of ALIDE, to WDFI and to development finance community at large.

WFDI

(WORLD FEDERATION OF DEVELOPMENT FINANCING INSTITUTIONS)

The World Federation of Development Financing Institutions (WFDI) was founded on June 13, 1979 among the Association of African Development Finance Institutions (AADFI) based in Abidjan, Cote d'Ivoire, the Association of Development Financing Institutions in Asia and the Pacific (ADFIAP) based in Manila, Philippines and the Latin American Association of Development Financing Institutions (ALIDE) based in Lima, Peru. The Association of National Development Finance Institutions in Member Countries of the Islamic Development Bank (ADFIMI) based in Istanbul, Turkey joined the WFDI afterwards. To date, the four regional development financing associations have a total membership in excess of 320 development financing institutions (DFIs) in over 150 countries and territories (developing countries).

WFDI was formed for a felt need that the international economic order in the 1960's will have to evolve from one that has so far been largely shaped by the exigencies of the industrialized countries into one where developing countries have a stronger voice in the directions it should take. But greater participation in the shaping of a new world required developing countries to be increasingly responsible for and reliant on themselves. It also meant that economic development in developing countries should drive its momentum from cooperation and understanding not only from developed countries but more so from among themselves, through their individual and collective imagination and initiatives.

The WFDI upholds the primacy of its commitment to the development of the regional associations as well as individual member-DFIs, varied and diverse may they and their programs be. More particularly, it supports not only the traditional role of development banking but also the more aggressive thrust of diversification now gaining foothold in most DFIs in order to ensure the continued impact of DFIs in the economic development of their respective areas. The WFDI considers itself as the global focal point for institutions providing and promoting sustainable development finance. Its vision is to be the world's preeminent knowledge and advocacy network on sustainable development finance.
